The centralized and bureaucratized governance system prevailing in Asia and Pacific region was established by the colonial rulers. This system was inherently repressive and insulated from the common people. The system was consistent with the supreme colonial objective centered on maximizing revenue and maintaining law and order in the colonies. Establishment of the self-governance system at local levels was eventually of little concern to colonial masters. In most cases, they attempted to transfer their own systems of governance in their respective colonies. The centralized governance system so devised, however, proved useful for rapid industrialization in almost all Asian countries following massive decolonization process. Gradually, those newly born countries badly felt the need for effective local governance system that would work as an integral part of the total national governance. This need became more important with the advent of the new millennium.

Homework

A wise person is one who is able to think rationally, and then acts in a way that produces the best outcome. In this regard, higher education is useful, but not sufficient for making a person wise; we need good teachers who can teach us to use our knowledge and experiences wisely. We also need them at all levels of education. Currently, most of the primary schools, which are the breeding centers of a nation, lack adequate number of good teachers. To ensure good quality at all levels of education, we have to ensure proper remuneration and good training facilities for teachers. If we fail to ensure these, we will become a nation where people will know a lot of things without knowing how to use them wisely.

Thank You
